

When Your Pet Needs a Cardiologist

Both dogs and cats hide outward signs of heart disease and typically do not appear sick until they are in a crisis. Early diagnosis and appropriate treatment by a board-certified veterinary cardiologist before heart disease becomes symptomatic or life-threatening are key to your pet living a longer, healthier life.

What to Expect at the Initial Consultation

Initial consultations include a complete cardiac workup by a board-certified cardiologist. You may accompany your pet for the entire visit.

The consultation will include:

Blood pressure reading

Echocardiogram and Auscultation

Full review of prior medical history

Plenty of time for questions and discussion

You will leave with an immediate diagnosis and treatment plan for your pet – and we'll communicate it to the rest of your veterinary care team, too!
